

Some demonstrators held up signs during the sit down.

Some of their signs proclaimed things such as, “Unapologetic and black,” and “Oppression is wrong.” While others referenced Bible verses, such as Romans 12:15 and Malachi 2:10.

The demonstration took place in the student section of Amon G. Carter Stadium, which is open to all TCU students. One protester, Elise Shropshire, a sophomore strategic communication and Spanish major, said a student threw an empty water bottle at her and another demonstrator.

Willis said she wants people to notice in order to raise awareness for such social injustices.

The university had a response to the silent demonstration.

Holly Ellman, the associate director of strategic communications for the marketing and communication department, wrote, “Texas Christian University recognizes the right of all members of the University community to express their views or to protest against actions and opinions with which they disagree.”
